This 2018 electronic edition of SENĆOŦEN: A Dictionary of the Saanich Language is generally identical in content to the hardbound print edition published by the University of Washington Press in 2018. The following are exceptions to this:

This e-edition contains hyperlinks (marked in red) for cross references.

This e-edition includes a photo in the introductory material of one of the elders that was not in the print edition.

This English-SENĆOŦEN section in this e-edition has been edited to make it more easy to use.

The page numbering differs slightly between the two editions

Preface

Saanich, SENĆOŦEN /sənčáθən/, is a dialect of what linguists have come to call the Northern Straits language. Northern Straits is one of the two languages of the Straits subgroup of Central Coast Salishan languages. SENĆOŦEN has been spoken since time immemorial on the Saanich Peninsula of southern Vancouver Island in British Columbia, Canada, and on the islands of the Haro and Rosario Straits and southern Strait of Georgia, today divided by the US-Canada border. Other dialects of Northern Straits are Sooke, Songish, Lummi, and Samish. SENĆOŦEN and Samish, spoken at the Malahat Reserve, are the only two dialects of Northern Straits with living L1 speakers (those who grew up speaking it as their first language), but each of the dialects has its own language revitalization program and each has its own writing system. Although they are mutually intelligible, they are traditionally considered separate languages.

The other Straits language is Klallam, spoken across the Strait of Juan de Fuca on the US side, on the north shore of the Olympic Peninsula. Although there are many grammatical, lexical, and phonological similarities, Klallam is a separate language and not mutually intelligible with any of the Northern Straits dialects. See Thompson, et al., 1974, and Montler 1999 for details of the relationships among these languages and dialects.

Today there are fewer than ten L1 speakers of SENĆOŦEN of varying levels of fluency. English has replaced the language in everyday use. However, there is a large and growing number of L2 speakers, some highly fluent. SENĆOŦEN is regularly used in all kinds of ceremonial settings, and it is increasingly being used daily for casual conversation. This increase in speakers is due to the heroic efforts of a few dedicated and talented young band members working with the W̱SÁNEĆ School Board. Classes in the language are taught at all levels and a large amount of immersion curriculum is being translated into and written in SENĆOŦEN.

The SENĆOŦEN revitalization effort was begun in the late 1970s by elder and L1 speaker Dave Elliott, Sr. He designed the unique SENĆOŦEN writing system and taught it to other L1 speakers and to his children, who have continued his legacy. See the description of the SENĆOŦEN alphabet below on page xi.

The research on which this dictionary is based has been funded since 1980 by grants from the Phillips Fund of the American Philosophical Society, the Jacobs Funds of the Whatcom Museum, the University of North Texas, and the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH). This dictionary is the direct product of a Documenting Endangered Languages (DEL) grant from NEH, which requires the inclusion of this statement: Any views, findings, conclusions, or recommendations expressed in this publication do not necessarily represent those of the National Endowment for the Humanities.

I thank the W̱SÁNEĆ people for their help and support with this project. I especially thank the elders, listed beginning on page viii, who have given their knowledge and support. Two of the elders deserve special thanks: Lou Claxton and Belinda Claxton. They have sat with me through many hours of entry checking and text transcription both in person and via video conferencing. HÍ SW KE, SI,Ī,ĀM,.

Thanks are due to John Elliott, Linda Elliott, and Jim Elliott, three of Dave Elliott's children, now elders themselves, who, though English is their first language, have heard SENĆOŦEN all their lives. They have carried on the legacy of their father and have passed it on to their children and to many others. They have been helpful and encouraging in the course of the dictionary project. I especially thank John Elliott for helping get all of the bird and bug names straight. His comments and contributions are marked throughout the dictionary with his initials. HÍ SW KE, SI,Ī,ĀM,.

In the first two years of the dictionary project, 2012–2014, University of Victoria linguistics PhD student Janet Leonard served as an invaluable assistant. Janet coordinated the apprentices working on the project and checked lexical items with several elders. Her earlier recordings of elders, all retranscribed by me, have made a significant contribution to this dictionary, especially in additional example sentences. Beyond her work in those first two years, Janet has pored through the drafts of the dictionary, sending flurries of email messages with suggestions, corrections, and questions. More than anyone else, Janet has provided insightful comments on the drafts and has helped make the dictionary clearer and more consistent. HÍ SW KE, SI,ĀM,.

In the third year of the project, graduate research assistant Rebecca Gignac helped build the SENĆOŦEN word list website and made many detailed comments and suggestions for the English–SENĆOŦEN index. HÍ SW KE, SI,ĀM,.

The apprentices mentioned above were part of the project throughout its first three years. Their role was the annotation of audio recordings using the Elan linguistic annotation software (<http://tla.mpi.nl/tools/tla-tools/elan>). Three of the apprentices, Philip Kevin Paul, Elisha Elliott and Jacqueline Jim, did an extraordinary amount of annotations. Also doing annotations were PENÁ Elliott, David Underwood, Ivy Seward, and Maddie Bartleman. Their annotations allowed for the extraction of around 18,000 audio clips for use in computer language applications such as the SENĆOŦEN word list website. Most of these apprentices have taken advanced training at the University of Victoria and are now SENĆOŦEN teachers themselves. HÍ SW KE, SI,Ī,ĀM,.

Two people associated with the W̱SÁNEĆ School Board have been very helpful. Tye Swallow of the Saanich Adult Education Centre (SAEC) has been encouraging and has been of great help in providing space at the SAEC and in facilitating honoraria for the native-speaking elders. Ken Foster, former principal of the ŁÁWELNEW Tribal School, worked for years supporting the language program. The computer word list he helped compile was a useful starting point for eliciting new words in building this dictionary. HÍ SW KE, SI, I, ÁM,.

We also were given space and help from folks at the Tsawout (East Saanich) band offices: Adelynne Claxton, Gwen Underwood, and Chief Harvey Underwood. HÍ SW KE, SI, I, ÁM,.

Two pioneers in SENĆOŦEN linguistics must be thanked for their major contributions. The late Thom Hess, professor at the University of Victoria, introduced me to SENĆOŦEN speaker Ernie Olsen and got me started on the language in 1980. His recordings of Ernie Olsen, Dave Elliott, and Stella Wright have been transcribed and included in this dictionary. The other linguist who must be thanked is Randy Bouchard of the BC Indian Language Project. He did immensely important early data collection and worked with SENĆOŦEN elder Chris Paul to show him the Bouchard practical orthography. He was also one of the developers of what has become the standard northwest classified word list, which is used on the website at <http://saanich.montler.net>. In 1971, he recorded an extensive classified word list from Chris Paul. These recordings have all been retranscribed, checked, and entered into the dictionary. Bouchard and his partner, Dorothy Kennedy, also had Chris Paul record another SENĆOŦEN elder, Philip Pelkey. Some of those recordings have been transcribed, with words and example sentences entered into this dictionary. HÍ SW KE, SI, I, ÁM,. I must thank Donna Gerds for introducing me to Bouchard and Kennedy.

I sought the help of University of Victoria ethnobotanist Nancy Turner on the identification of some plants whose names I had recorded. It was easier to introduce her to Elsie Claxton and Violet Williams, with whom Turner worked in the development of her book on Saanich plants (Turner and Hebda 2012). Almost all of the plant identifications in this dictionary have been confirmed by Professor Turner.

The University of North Texas provided financial and logistical support over the years. For this project, several chairs, deans, and provosts have been especially supportive: Brenda Sims, Kim Campbell, Warren Burggren, Art Goven, David Holdeman, and Geoff Gamble. Geoff, as a UNT Vice Provost who is also a field linguist, provided crucial help in explaining to the UNT business office why it is unreasonable to seek bids from native speaking elders. HÍ SW KE, SI, I, ÁM,.

As was the Klallam Dictionary (Montler 2012), this dictionary was built with Field Linguist's Toolbox software. I again thank Alan and Karen Buseman for their work in maintaining this important tool. For the finderlist and subentry structure, I again used the Lexware system developed by Robert Hsu. This dictionary makes use of Hsu's recently revised and improved version of the finderlist module. The English-SENĆOŦEN index now has subentries, making it much more useful. I also thank Professor Hsu for his detailed comments and suggestions for improving the finder list.

I thank Angela Collins and Elizabeth Camilleri for their help with ABCs. Ivy Doak, who helped with proofreading, has continued to provide support and advice, linguistic and otherwise. límtmn. Patrick Montler, who also helped with proofreading, and Maggie Montler keep me going through the often tedious business of lexicography. HÍ SW KE, NE NENNENE,.

Contributing native-speaking elders

Every word and example sentence in the dictionary is identified as to its source. Twenty-six elder speakers of SENĆOŦEN as their first language contributed the words, sentences, and stories that made this dictionary possible. They are listed and pictured here in alphabetical order of the initials used to identify their contributions. The photos and some of the dates were provided by Belinda Claxton, Denise Sam, Kevin Paul, and Jacqueline Jim. HÍ SW KE, SI, ÁM,.

AJ – Anne Jimmy (1945–2014) was the daughter of Baptiste Jimmy. She worked with Montler, checking dictionary entries, and with Janet Leonard, providing example sentences for entries.

BC – Belinda Claxton (1951–), the youngest child of Elsie Claxton, helped translate the recordings of her mother, Chris Paul, and Philip Pelkey.

BJ – Baptiste Jimmy (1901–1982), known as TISTE, was recorded on one tape in 1981 by Earl Claxton, Sr., telling personal history and anecdotes. That tape was transcribed and translated by Montler with the help of Elsie Claxton and Violet Williams.

CJ – Cecelia Jim (1887–1975) was recorded on two sides of one tape in 1975 by Violet Williams. That tape was transcribed and translated by Montler with the help of Elsie Claxton and Violet Williams

CP – Christopher Paul (1894–1976) was recorded in 1971 by Randy Bouchard on tapes that have been digitized to eighteen 30–40 minute audio files. Fifteen of these files are lists of words, and three are continuous narratives. These have all been transcribed by Montler and included in this dictionary. The narratives were transcribed with the help of Louis Claxton and Belinda Claxton.

DE – Dave Elliott, Sr. (1910–1985) was the creator of the SENĆOŦEN alphabet. In the late 1970s he organized a group of SENĆOŦEN speakers interested in preserving the language. He taught them his new alphabet and together they wrote hundreds of pages of lists of words and paradigms. Unfortunately very little of this was recorded on audio. We have a few recordings of him made by Thom Hess. His book (Elliott 1983) is the standard reference on SENĆOŦEN place names.

DELC – Dave Elliott's Language Classes. Items in the dictionary with this abbreviation are words in the handwritten and typed notes from the elder language classes held by Dave Elliott in the late 1970s and

- early 1980s. Items with only this listed as the source have not been verifiable with living L1 SENĆOŦEN speakers. The early lists that this material comes from were subject to many typos and misspellings. Stress is left unmarked in the phonetic rendering of these items because it was never marked in the original. Stress is not always predictable from the spelling. The typos tend to be more frequent involving the letters <T, Ƨ, Ƨ, T> and <K, Ƒ, Ƒ, Ƒ>, which show missing or misplaced modifying characters.
- EC – Elsie Claxton (1906–2000) was the last monolingual speaker of SENĆOŦEN. She could understand English pretty well, but was not a fluent English speaker. She was the primary L1 consultant for Montler (1986, 1991, 1993). Her intuitions and pronunciations recorded in around 100 audio files form the basis for this dictionary. All sessions with Mrs. Claxton were accompanied by Violet Williams, who spoke both English and SENĆOŦEN fluently. Recordings of Earl Claxton, Sr., Manson Pelkey, Gabriel Bartleman, Cecilia Jim, and Baptiste Jimmy were transcribed and translated with their help.
- EH – Esther Harry (1929–2017) worked with Montler and Leonard one day, but worked many times with the SENĆOŦEN language revitalization group.
- EO – Ernie Olsen (1917–1982) was the first person Montler heard speak SENĆOŦEN. Trained at the University of Victoria in writing the language in the phonetic system, he recorded other elders and wrote down stories himself. Unfortunately, those materials have not been made available for this dictionary project. We do have two recordings of him made in 1974 by Thom Hess that are incorporated here.
- ErC – Earl Claxton, Sr. (1931–2011), eldest son of Elsie Claxton, was one of the first to take up Dave Elliott’s writing system. After Dave Elliott’s passing, Earl Claxton carried on for him, leading the revitalization group. He received an honorary doctorate in 2006 from the University of Victoria in recognition of his language work. He was recorded on several tapes by Montler in the 1980s telling traditional tales and identifying place names. These narratives were transcribed and translated with the help of Elsie Claxton and Violet Williams and incorporated into the dictionary. Almost all of the place names in this dictionary were verified by him. Another tape of him listing plant names was recorded by his youngest sister, Belinda Claxton. His book on reef net technology (Claxton and Elliott 1994) was very helpful in translating and transcribing Philip Pelkey’s recorded SENĆOŦEN description of reef netting. All of those words have been included here. Some that have not been audio recorded are marked RNT as the source.
- GB – Gabriel Bartleman (1914–1999) asked Montler in 1991, through Elsie Claxton, to come to his home and record his family history. Over the course of several days, three tapes were made of Mr. Bartleman telling his personal history and several traditional stories. This was all transcribed and translated with the help of Elsie Claxton and Violet Williams and entered into the dictionary.
- HJ – Helen Jack (1936–) has learned to write SENĆOŦEN and has become a language teacher at the school. She helped with checking many dictionary entries and in text transcription for this dictionary.
- IJ – Irvin Jimmy (1939–2016) worked with the elders group of the SENĆOŦEN revitalization program. He was a very active business man until his passing. We have only a few words recorded from him.
- IM – Ivan Morris (1928–2014) was a leader and early adherent of the Elliott system for writing SENĆOŦEN. He worked a few days with Montler, but a large number of his words and sentences were recorded by Janet Leonard in 2007 to 2009, usually working with Raymond Sam. He was also recorded by Belinda Claxton. All of those recordings were transcribed by Montler and checked for accuracy with Louis Claxton before being entered into the dictionary.
- JT – Jane Tate was recorded in 1962 on one tape by anthropologist/linguist Wayne Suttles. She grew up at Pauquachin, but moved at a young age to live with her husband’s people at Klahoose. Only Lavina Charles of the elders remembered her. Her narrative was transcribed and translated by Montler with the help of Lavina Charles and Anne Jimmy for entry into the dictionary.
- LAC – Lavina Charles (1936–) is the last living elder of Dave Elliott’s original language revitalization group. She speaks both SENĆOŦEN and Hulq’umín’um’. Being more comfortable with the latter language, she teaches it on the Becher Bay reserve using the Elliott alphabet. She helped with some text translation and with checking many dictionary entries.
- LGC – Louis Claxton (1936–) is Elsie Claxton’s second son. Formerly a long-time chief and band council member, since 2012 he has devoted more and more time to helping with the language revitalization program. He and his sister Belinda Claxton have been the main source for checking and double checking dictionary entries. They have also assisted in the translation and transcription of the recordings of their mother, Chris Paul, and Philip Pelkey. You will see the initials LGC more often than any others in this dictionary.
- MJ – Mary Jack (1933–) helped with checking dictionary entries and text transcription early in the project.
- MP – Manson Pelkey (1939–2004) was the son of Elsie Claxton’s brother Sandy. He was recorded by Montler in the 1980s speaking elicited sentences and telling all kinds of stories. Most of his stories have been transcribed with the help of Elsie Claxton and Violet Williams and included in this dictionary. Every example sentence with MP as the source has also been verified by EC and VW.
- NW – Norman Williams (1921–1988) was chief at Pauquachin and the husband of Violet Williams. A few incidental words and sentences were recorded spoken by him and included here.

PP – Philip Pelkey (1894–1975), known as PELEC, was the oldest brother of Elsie Claxton. He was a locally well known and loved storyteller. He was recorded by Christopher Paul for Bouchard and Kennedy in 1971. We have fourteen 30–45 minute tapes of him telling all kinds of stories—SENĆOŦEN only, no English. Some of these have been transcribed and translated with the help of Louis Claxton and Belinda Claxton and included in this dictionary. Every example sentence with a PP source has also been verified by them.

RH – Richard Harry (1902-1976) was chief at Tsawout when he was recorded in 1969 speaking elicited words on about 10 minutes of a tape. The person eliciting the words is unknown, but possibly linguist Barbara Efrat. All of these items have been included in the dictionary.

RS – Raymond Sam (1930–2010) was one of Dave Elliott’s original elders group. He was recorded speaking many elicited words and short sentences by Janet Leonard in 2007 to 2009, usually working with Ivan Morris. He was also recorded by Belinda Claxton. All of those recordings were transcribed by Montler and checked for accuracy with Louis Claxton before being entered into the dictionary.

SW – The late Stella Wright was one of Dave Elliott’s original elders group. She was recorded with Dave Elliott by Thom Hess in the 1980s speaking words and sentences for some basic lessons. Those have all been included in the dictionary.

VJ – Victor Joseph (1924–1989) was recorded on one tape by Montler in the 1980’s. That recording has been included in the dictionary.

VW – Violet Williams (1925–1993) was a good friend and relative of Elsie Claxton. All of Montler’s recordings of Elsie Claxton were with the help of Violet Williams. She was fluent in SENĆOŦEN, but considered her first language to be Hulq’umín’um’. She had close SENĆOŦEN family and was married to an L1 SENĆOŦEN speaker with whom she usually spoke only SENĆOŦEN. She spoke only SENĆOŦEN to Elsie Claxton during recording sessions and acted as a translator, since Mrs. Claxton’s English was not fluent. In the dictionary, the source for these sessions usually is indicated as (EC, VW), with Mrs. Claxton’s initials first. Items marked (VW, EC) are from a tape recorded by ethnobotanist Nancy Turner, where Mrs. Williams seems to be the primary source of plant identification.

A Brief Introduction to the Saanich Language

The SENĆOŦEN Alphabet

Dave Elliott, Sr., had learned to write the language in the common phonetic alphabet from Thom Hess at the University of Victoria, and in a practical orthography designed by Randy Bouchard. Mr. Elliott found things to like and dislike about both systems. He liked the one-symbol-per-sound idea of the phonetic alphabet, but also the ease of typing the practical alphabet. He disliked the exotic symbols like <λ, θ, η> of the phonetic system, but he also disliked the multitude of digraphs and trigraphs such as <lh, ch, sh, th, kw', th'> of the practical system. He set about designing his own alphabet using four symbols <', /, -, _> added to letters that could be easily typed to make a one-symbol-per-sound system. He used the underlined <k> from the practical orthography and the barred <l> from the phonetic system. Immediately noticing that the <l> when combined with <-> for the /l/ sound would be easily confused with <t>, he settled on using only uppercase letters, <ł>.

Mr. Elliott consciously chose letters based on their English usage because he knew that anyone using the alphabet would first be literate in English. His goal was to make the alphabet easy to learn and use. The alphabet was not designed as or ever intended as a scientifically precise linguistic system.

The alphabet's phonemic inaccuracies lie primarily in the vowels and diphthongs. The letter <f> can indicate /əy/ or /ay/ or either of these with initial glottal stop and/or glottalized /y/. However, <íY,> is the spelling for the common word /ʔəy/ 'good'; the extra <Y> here is unique. The mid front vowel phoneme varies phonetically among [e], [ɛ], and [æ] depending on context and speaker. The SENĆOŦEN alphabet has two symbols <Á> and <A> for versions of /e/ in different contexts and a third <Ā> for the /ey/ diphthong. The /u/ phoneme occurs stressed only in a few loan words. Unstressed [u] is a variant of the phoneme /w/. The SENĆOŦEN alphabet uses <U> for the /u/ in loans, the [u] from /w/, and for /w/ when not in syllable initial position. At the beginning of a syllable <W> is used.

The consonants follow the phonemic pattern of the language closely except for glottal stop and glottalized sonorant consonants. Following the pattern of English phonology where the glottal stop is automatic at the beginning of a word, the SENĆOŦEN /ʔ/ phoneme, written as a comma <,>, is not marked at the beginning of a word. It is also often ignored in other contexts. Similarly, glottalized sonorant consonants are often not indicated in written material. In some material, the comma is added to avoid a potential English-influenced mispronunciation as in <S,HELl> [shəlí] 'life'. Here there is no glottal stop. In some of the written records, the comma is added somewhat arbitrarily as in one spelling of <S,MĪĒ,> [smíʔə] 'spirit dance.' The /s/ here is a prefix, but this word is not always spelled this way and the /s/ prefix is not usually followed by <,>.

In this dictionary, the spellings have been made a little more consistent. Glottal stop is still not marked at the beginning of a word, but it is always marked where it is pronounced elsewhere in a word. The symbol <,> (Unicode U+00B8 cedilla) is substituted for the regular comma. It looks similar to the comma, but it is much more easily searched for and edited in electronic documents. Glottalized sonorants are consistently consonant followed by <,>; so, for example, <M,> is /mʔ/.

Stress is not typically marked in the SENĆOŦEN writing system, but this dictionary has marked stress in a few headwords that differ only in stress. The stressed vowel in these cases is marked with an underline. For example, <MEQET> 'to take all of it' and <MEĒQET> 'pick it up,' differ in that in the former, the second vowel has the stress.

One more item that has been made consistent in this dictionary is the spelling of the third-person possessive suffix. In some of the more recent written material a lowercase <s> is used. It was not used in any of the material directly from Dave Elliott, and it is not used consistently. Sometimes the possessive is written <s> and sometimes <S>. Sometimes an /s/ prefix is written <s> and attached to a previous word. Sometimes a lowercase <s> appears in the middle of a word for unknown reasons. The trouble is that there are at least a dozen different suffixes and prefixes in SENĆOŦEN that have /s/ as the only consonant. Marking that one suffix consistently would require a detailed understanding of SENĆOŦEN grammar. In this dictionary, the lowercase <s> has been abandoned.

Since linguistic accuracy is important, each word in the dictionary is given in the SENĆOŦEN alphabet followed by the phonemic version between slash (/) characters. Since roots and affixes are linguistic and grammatical concepts where underlying forms cannot easily be represented in the SENĆOŦEN alphabet, the phonemic symbols are used in the root and affix indexes. The following is a list of all phonetic symbols shown in the alphabetical order used in the root and affix indexes of this dictionary:

ʔ a č č' e ə h i k k^w k'^w l l' l'^w m m' n n' ŋ ŋ' p p' q q' q^w q'^w s š t t' t'^h u w w' x^w x' x'^w y y'

The SENĆOŦEN alphabetical order is given at the bottom of each page of the dictionary for ease of use. Note that the glottal stop and glottalization of sonorant consonants (,) is ignored in alphabetization:

A Á Ā B C Ć Ć' D E H I Í J K K' Ḳ L Ł M N N' O P Q S Š T ʔ
X̣ Ṭ U W Ẉ X X̣ Y

The following describes the sounds (phonemes) represented by the letters of the alphabet taken in groups from the front of the mouth to the back.

CONSONANTS

This chart displays the letters of the alphabet and their IPA equivalents organized by place (columns) and manner (rows) of articulation. The places are bilabial, dental, alveolar, lateral, palatal, velar, labiovelar, uvular, labio-uvular, and glottal. The manners are plosive, ejective, fricative, sonorant, and laryngealized sonorant. Only the sonorants are voiced.

P B M M', represent /p, p', m, m'/, which are produced with the lips together.

P /p/ is the same as the sound at the beginning and end of English "pop."

B /p'/ is ejective. It is like P but the sound is "ejected" out of the mouth with a strong pop.

- M /m/ is the same as the sound at the beginning and end of English “mom.”
- M, /m̥/ is like M but produced with a sort of tightness in the throat called a “creaky voice.”
- Ƨ Ƨ represent /θ, θ̥/, which are produced with the tip of the tongue against the front teeth.
- Ƨ /θ/ is much like the sound at the beginning of the English word “think.” In SENĆOŦEN, this usually sounds much closer to S, and, in fact, some speakers use S instead of Ƨ.
- Ƨ /θ̥/ is unlike any sound in English. For this sound, put your tongue against your front teeth right at the gum line, then release it with a pop. Listen carefully to various L1 speakers’ recordings with this sound.
- T D S N N, represent /t, t̥, s, n, n̥/, which are produced with the tip of the tongue against the area above the gums behind the upper teeth called the alveolar ridge.
- T /t/ is the same as the sound at the beginning and end of English “tot.”
- D /t̥/ is ejective. It is like T but “ejected” out of the mouth with a strong pop.
- S /s/ is the same as the sound at the beginning and end of English “sis.”
- N /n/ is the same as the sound at the beginning and end of English “none.”
- N, /n̥/ is like N but produced with a sort of tightness in the throat called a “creaky voice.”
- Č J Š Y Y, represent /č, č̥, š, y, y̥/, which are produced with the tongue toward the front part of the roof of the mouth—a little farther back than for T, D, S, N, and N,.
- Č /č/ is the same as the sound at the beginning and end of English “church.”
- J /č̥/ is ejective. It is like Č but “ejected” out of the mouth with a strong pop.
- Š /š/ is the same as the sound at the beginning of English “sugar” or “shoe.”
- Y /y/ is the same as the sound at the beginning of English “yes.” See the vowel symbols Å and Í for the pronunciation of the /y/ phoneme after /e/, /ə/, and /a/.
- Y, /y̥/ is like Y but produced with a sort of tightness in the throat called a “creaky voice.” See the vowel symbols Å and Í for the pronunciation of the /y̥/ phoneme after /e/, /ə/, and /a/.
- Ƨ Ƨ Ƨ L L, represent /ɬ, ɬ, ɬ, ɬ̥/, which are all produced with the tip of the tongue positioned as for T but with the air flowing around the side of the tongue.
- Ƨ /ɬ̥/ is ejective. It is like a ƧƧ combination produced with a strong pop. Listen carefully to various L1 speakers’ recordings with this sound.
- Ƨ /ɬ/ is a “juicy” sound. Put your tongue in the position for T and blow. It’s easier to demonstrate than describe. Listen carefully to various L1 speakers’ recordings with this sound.
- L /l/ is like the sound at the beginning and end of English “lull.”
- L, /l̥/ is like L but produced with a sort of tightness in the throat called a “creaky voice.”
- Ƨ Ƨ Q W W U, represent /k, k̥, k̥̥, x̥, w, w̥/, which are produced with the lips rounded and the back of the tongue raised toward the back and roof of the mouth.
- Ƨ /k/ is very rare in SENĆOŦEN. It occurs only in a few words borrowed from English or Chinook Jargon. It is the same as the sound at the beginning and end of English “kick.”
- Ƨ /k̥/ is the same as the sound at the beginning of English “quick.”
- Q /k̥̥/ is ejective. It is like Ƨ but ejected out of the mouth with a strong pop.
- W /x̥/ is similar to the sound at the beginning of English “which” (if you pronounce it differently from “witch”). It is pronounced with the tongue in the same position as for Ƨ, but the air is blown continuously through.
- W /w/ is the same as the sound at the beginning of English “wow.”
- U, /w̥/ is like W but produced with a sort of tightness in the throat called a “creaky voice.” It never occurs at the beginning of a word.
- Ƨ Ƨ X N N, represent /q, q̥, x̥, ŋ, ŋ̥/, which are all produced with the tongue pulled extremely far back in the mouth toward the uvula.
- Ƨ /q/ is similar to the sound at the beginning of the English word “call”, but the back of the tongue is touching farther back.
- K /q̥/ is ejective. It is like Ƨ but ejected out of the mouth with a strong pop.
- X /x̥/ is unlike any English sound. It is produced with the tongue touching far back as for Ƨ, but the air flows continuously making a rough throat-clearing sound.
- N /ŋ/ is similar to the sound at the end of English “sung.”
- N, /ŋ̥/ is like N but produced with a sort of tightness in the throat called a “creaky voice.”
- Ƨ Ƨ X represent /q̥̥, q̥̥̥, x̥̥̥/, which are similar to the preceding sounds but are produced with the lips rounded.
- Ƨ /q̥̥/ is like Ƨ with the lips rounded.
- Ƨ /q̥̥̥/ is ejective. It is like Ƨ but ejected out of the mouth with a strong pop.
- X /x̥̥̥/ is the same as X but produced with the lips rounded.
- Ƨ H represent /ʔ, h/, which are both produced deep in the throat right at the vocal chords.
- Ƨ /ʔ/ is called “glottal stop.” It sounds like a catch or abrupt stoppage of air in the throat. This sound is what separates the two vowel sounds in English “uh-oh.” It is not a regular phoneme in English, but in SENĆOŦEN it is a consonant like P, T or any other. In handwritten material and in much typed material, this is written as a comma. In this dictionary a comma (,) is a punctuation mark. The cedilla character (,) is the glottal stop.
- H /h/ is the same as the first sound in English “hat.”

VOWELS

While the consonants of the SENĆOŦEN system generally indicate the phonemes of the language well, the vowel symbols show more deviation, influenced by English phonology.

I Á E U O represent /i, e, ə, u, a/, the vowel sounds of SENĆOŦEN.

I /i/ is the same as the  in English “machine.”

A variant of /e/ [ɛ] or [æ] is rare in SENĆOŦEN. It occurs for some speakers only before the uvulars Ʒ, K, Ʒ, Ʒ, X, or Ʒ. It is like the <e> in English “bet” or the  in English “bat.”

Á variant of /e/ [e] is the common variant. It is like the vowel in English “bait” but without the [i] glide at the end. It is similar to the <e> in English “bet” but tenser.

E /ə/ is pronounced like the  and <o> of English “above” or like the  in English “cut.” It also can sound like the vowels of English “hook” or “hit,” depending on what sounds it is next to.

U /u/ is usually pronounced like the <oo> in English “hoot.” It also represents the glide /w/ when not at the beginning of a syllable. See the pronunciation of diphthongs, below.

O /a/ is pronounced like the  in English “father” or the <o> in English “hot.”

DIPHTHONGS

Á Í U, represent diphthongs in SENĆOŦEN.

Á /ey/ is like the “long vowel”/diphthong in English “bait.”

Í /ay/ or /əy/ is like the diphthong in English “tide” or “tight,” as pronounced by some Canadian English speakers. For those familiar with standard transcription, the mark on this <ɪ> might be mistaken for stress. It never indicates stress.

U, /əw/ or /uʔ/ is like the diphthong in some pronunciations of English “coat” or Canadian English “out,” especially when preceded by E. It can also be pronounced as the vowel U followed by the glottal stop.

THE SENĆOŦEN WORD

As in the other Salishan languages, a word in SENĆOŦEN is typically made up of one root, which typically has one or more prefixes and suffixes. Many roots are bound, requiring affixation, but many can be free and stand as words by themselves. See the roots in the root index and the large number of affixes in the affix index for a complete list. Reduplication, infixation, ablaut, and metathesis are also morphological processes in the language. For descriptions of these see Montler 1986, 1989, and the complete grammar that is in progress. Variable stress combined with all this root-level morphology makes the parsing of words complicated. Word stress is not predictable without morphological information. Some suffixes tend to attract stress from the root, and some roots tend to retain stress. The shift of stress away from a morpheme causes unstressed vowels to reduce to /ə/ or delete, making parsing difficult. Some of these processes are described in Montler 1986, but more detail will appear in the grammar in progress.

The root index shows the word structure in detail. See also the sketch of the morphology of the language in Montler 1986. Since SENĆOŦEN word structure is typical of Coast Salishan languages, a look at Montler 2015 on Klallam, Suttles 2004 on Musqueam (both very similar to SENĆOŦEN) or Watanabe 2003 on Sliammon (somewhat less like SENĆOŦEN) will give a good orientation.

The analyses given in each entry and in the root and affix indexes should be considered hypotheses for underlying forms. They represent current understanding of SENĆOŦEN morphology and phonology. In these analyses, a hyphen follows a prefix and precedes a suffix. The root sign, √, marks the beginning of a root. Angled brackets, < and >, delineate infixes and ablaut. A plus sign, +, follows a reduplicated morpheme. The equals sign, =, precedes a lexical suffix.

There are two unusual symbols in some analyses: Y and W. These represent cases of sonorant-obstruent (/y ~ č/ and /w ~ kʷ/) alternation. There are cases of /č/, /y/, /kʷ/, /w/ that do not alternate. These alternating units seem to be distinct entities. Their theoretical status is undetermined. The use of the uppercase Y and W here should be considered simply as an indicator of the segment’s alternating and undecided underlying status.

THE SENĆOŦEN SENTENCE

A full grammar of SENĆOŦEN is in progress, and some of the basics of syntax and paradigms can be found in Montler (1986, 1989, 1993, 2003). Here we will only mention a few basic and important things to keep in mind with simple sentences in SENĆOŦEN grammar.

The first important point is that the main verb comes first in the SENĆOŦEN sentence. It may be preceded by an auxiliary or intensifier connected to it by an U, /ʔəw/ or I, /ʔiʔ/ particle. These are indicated in the dictionary as u-class or i-class auxiliary/intensifiers. There is a set of around 30 second-position particles indicating speech situation participants and other notions (such as hearsay) that stipulate the speaker’s attitude toward the statement. These particles always follow the first word of a clause—auxiliary or main verb.

The second important thing to keep in mind with SENĆOŦEN grammar is that every verb (or even every word) is either transitive or intransitive. Every transitive verb has a transivizing suffix. If a verb does not end in one of the transivizing suffixes followed by the –ES third-person main clause subject, the sentence can have only one noun that is not in a prepositional phrase.

The third important thing connects directly to the second one. Every noun is preceded by an article (TFE is the most common) to form a noun phrase. A transitive sentence can have two noun phrases, which would be the subject and object of the sentence. A third noun phrase can be included, but it must be preceded by the preposition E. An intransitive sentence can have only a single subject noun phrase. Other noun phrases may be included, but they must each be preceded by the preposition E.

As in Klallam (Montler 2008, 2015), it is possible to have several verbs in a sentence all sharing the same subject in a serial verb pattern. The form and function of subordinate clauses in SENĆOŦEN are quite different from Klallam. Other details will be found in the forthcoming SENĆOŦEN grammar.

About the Dictionary

The material that this dictionary is built on comes from around 72 hours of audio recordings from 1980 to 1991 and 293 hours—about half using video conferencing—from 2011 to 2016 recorded by Timothy Montler. This is supplemented by about 15 hours recorded by Janet Leonard from 2008 to 2012 and 11 hours recorded in 1971 by Randy Bouchard. There were also a few tapes from other sources as described in the “contributing native-speaking elders” section (page viii).

For the sake of consistency, all of the audio recordings were transcribed, or retranscribed, by Montler. All continuous narrative material recorded from 1980 to 1991 was transcribed with the help of Elsie Claxton and Violet Williams. All other recorded narrative was transcribed with the help of Louis Claxton and Belinda Claxton.

Every item in the dictionary is marked with the source initials of the speaker. A few of the items in the dictionary have the source initials followed by the letters “nr”. This means “not recorded;” for some reason the recorder was switched off or there was background noise during recording. Other than those few items, almost every word and sentence in the dictionary is recorded on audio.

The one large class of exceptions to audio recording is the list of items from Dave Elliott’s language classes that were written with no sound recording. Attempts were made to check and record every one of those items, which amount to around 3,000. There are around 1,280 of these items in the dictionary that could not be confirmed. These are clearly marked as “not confirmed” and, if the word is especially problematic, a note is given to that effect in the entry and also listed a problematic in the English-SENĆOŦEN index.

For the Klallam dictionary, it was possible to gather everything that was recorded on the language and include it in the dictionary. This is not the case for the SENĆOŦEN dictionary. As noted above (page ix), L1 speaker Ernie Olsen made recordings that have not been made available for this project. Other linguists have collected material on SENĆOŦEN that has not been accessible to this project. Typically those linguists were not looking for lexical items, but studying some narrow subject like stress or aspect, so it is unlikely that there are words in their corpus that are not in this dictionary.

Every word that we have recordings of is in this dictionary. There are two exceptions to this. There are around 6 hours of recordings of Philip Pelkey telling stories made by Chris Paul for Randy Bouchard in 1971 and around the same amount of recorded narrative from Elsie Claxton, Manson Pelkey, and Gabe Bartleman made from 1985 to 1991 by Montler. The transcription of these narratives is time consuming and ongoing; a dictionary is needed now. When these texts are ready to be made available, they will be accompanied by a detailed lexical index for new words that might appear in them.

The other exception to every word recorded being entered is the set of traditional personal names. As for the Klallam dictionary, culturally sensitive and linguistically active band members were consulted and a decision was made not to include traditional personal names in the dictionary. Hundreds of SENĆOŦEN traditional names have been recorded, but these are private property handed down in families through the generations and not to be used or given outside of a clear and rigorous protocol. They are certainly SENĆOŦEN words in every way, but they are not appropriate for this dictionary.

In other ways also, this dictionary follows the model of the Klallam dictionary. The main dictionary entry’s headword is the most common or most precisely pronounced variant. Other variants are listed toward the end of an entry. To keep the dictionary as accessible as possible to the widest range of users, all main entries are fully usable words; there are no ‘underlying forms.’ There are a few stems in short entries cross-referenced to a main entry. These are marked as such. Plurals, diminutives, actuals, reciprocals, reflexives, and verbs marked for direct object are each given their own entries. These provide no redundancy since they would have to be included and exemplified as subentries, if not as headwords in themselves. In all my experience in lexicography, I have found the correctness of Mary Haas’s 1962 dictum repeatedly confirmed: ‘A good dictionary is one in which you can find the information you are looking for—preferably in the very first place you look.’ I have strived to do this as far as practicable. The dictionary is not based on root entries, but roots and forms derived from them are given in a separate index.

The method of building the SENĆOŦEN dictionary was much the same as that for building the Klallam dictionary. Field Linguist’s Toolbox software (www.angelfire.com/planet/linguisticsisfun), was used to enter all handwritten notes as analyzed interlinear text with word, morpheme, and free glosses. Field notes and data entry for SENĆOŦEN used the standard phonetic symbols. For much of the material, the Elliott orthography was added automatically by a small computer program and then adjusted by hand. For other entries, the SENĆOŦEN was typed in and later checked for consistency. As the text was interlinearized, new words were inserted into the dictionary with definitions, examples, analyses, and commentary. Every item in the dictionary was coded for speaker with notebook, page, and line number. This process was made much easier and more consistent through the use of the keyboard macro/scripting language AutoHotKey (<https://autohotkey.com/>).

The Field Linguist's Toolbox software was used for the Klallam dictionary, and its use was continued for the SENĆOŦEN dictionary. Other dictionary software such as Flex was investigated, but none match Toolbox for its functionality, flexibility, and ease of use. Toolbox does have drawbacks. It is certainly not the easiest to get set up and started on a project, and it is not for a shared project. It is for a one-lexicographer project. Toolbox is excellent for data entry and interlinearization, but it lacks good support for subentry structure and for the generation of an inverted dictionary or finderlist. The Lexware system for bilingual dictionary-making was created by Robert Hsu at the University of Hawaii. Lexware is a modular, batch-oriented system using the Spitbol programming language. Although Lexware was originally developed in the 1970s, Professor Hsu was still upgrading and improving parts of it until his death in 2018. As recently as 2014, he distributed a new version of a module that allows for the generation of subentries in the finderlist. The usefulness of the English to SENĆOŦEN finderlist here has been greatly improved by this new module. As software goes, there is not yet anything superior to the way Lexware handles sub-entries and generates an inverted dictionary. Lexware format is as flexible as Toolbox format, and conversion between them and XML for archiving is easy.

In Lexware format, programs generated the finder list, extracted affixes and roots from the analysis records, and generated the root and affix indexes. After editing, those indexes, the main dictionary, and the finder list were formatted with HTML using another Spitbol program and a CSS style sheet file. The HTML files were then formatted for columns, page headers, and footers in MS Word.

In addition to Toolbox, Lexware, Word, and AutoHotkey, this project made heavy use of EditPad Pro (www.editpadpro.com) for consistency checking, searching, and all kinds of minor editing tasks. EditPad has Unicode support and its regular expression facility is superb. Its editable syntax coloring proved to be especially important for consistency checking.

As part of this project, a website, saanich.montler.net, has been set up with links to a hypertext version of Montler 1986, a classified word list with sound for several thousand SENĆOŦEN words, an online app for putting lists of words into the SENĆOŦEN alphabetical order, and an online app for converting standard North American phonetic alphabet to SENĆOŦEN. Other material will be added to the site as it becomes available.

All transcription, data entry, analysis, programming, and processing were done by Montler. Only he, not the elders nor anyone else, is responsible for any errors.

In order to keep the dictionary a manageable size, the precise source information has been removed, leaving only the speakers' initials. The notebook, page, and line numbers for the sources have been removed in the print version. An online version of the full unreduced dictionary will be made available for anyone interested in pursuing an entry in more depth.

The entire notebook database eventually will also be made available.

Organization of Entries

The SENĆOŦEN-to-English Section

An entry in the main SENĆOŦEN-to-English section has a headword in boldface type in the SENĆOŦEN writing system. The headword is followed by the phonemic representation between slash (/) characters of the same word in the standard North American phonetic alphabet. The definition of the word follows the phonemic representation. A word may have more than one definition. If so, each definition is preceded by a numeral. The definition gives as much of the full range of meaning of the word as possible. Verbs in definitions are preceded by 'to' as in 'to go.' There are no infinitives, as such, in SENĆOŦEN. The 'to' here simply indicates that the word is used to distinguish verbs from nouns both in the definition in the main section and in the English-SENĆOŦEN index.

There may be etymological, usage, cultural, or other commentary after the definition. The contributing elders' initials are given in parentheses. A comma between elders' initials indicates that they were together and agreed on the word. Every speaker who affirmed the word is listed as a source. If, for example, a word is listed with only one source speaker, then that word was not recorded from any other speaker.

After the definition, commentary, and source initials, there usually are a number of example sentences. Every effort was made to get at least one example sentence for each word, except for some plant names and place names. Each example is given in the SENĆOŦEN alphabet followed in slashes with the example in the phonetic alphabet. The English free translation and source initials follow that. The headword's occurrence in the examples is marked with bold italic. The examples provide models for usage and often develop the meaning given in the definition.

After the definition or after an example sentence there may be special commentary marked by a triangular bullet ▶. This provides more specific cultural and historical context that the elders wanted to add to make the meaning and use of the word clear or to add interest.

Many words given in the headword have variant forms. These are marked by VAR: and may have example sentences, themselves. These usually are variant pronunciations, but they may be more substantially different from the headword. Variants that are particularly distinct have their own headwords that point back to the main entry.

In some entries a stem for subject suffixes is given if the stem is different from the headword. These stems are not themselves pronounceable as separate words.

At the end of the entry is an analysis showing the root and all identifiable prefixes, suffixes, infixes, and reduplication. The analysis represents current understanding of the language showing hypothetical underlying forms for the morphemes. An index icon  points to a word that represents the immediate stem or a closely related word. More information about the grammatical, semantic, and pragmatic details of the word can be found by going to that entry.

The English-to-SENĆOŦEN Section

This section is an index or finder list keyed to the main SENĆOŦEN-to-English section. It is not intended to be used as an English-to-SENĆOŦEN dictionary. It does not give full SENĆOŦEN definitions for the English word. Use it to look up an English word, then go to the entry in the main section for details of what the SENĆOŦEN word means and how it is used.

The Affix Index Section

This section lists all of the affixes (prefixes and suffixes) found in SENĆOŦEN. The prefixes are listed first, then the grammatical suffixes. The lexical suffixes have special status due to their substantive, noun-like meanings. They are given a separate section after the grammatical suffixes. Each affix entry lists all of the example sentences containing that affix.

The Root Index Section

This section lists each root and the words in the dictionary that are built on that root. The root carries the basic meaning of the word. It is what the prefixes and suffixes attach to. It is also the base for infixes, such as the plural EL /əɫ/ infix, and reduplication, such as the diminutive, which copies the first consonant of the root.

You will find every word in the dictionary in the root index except for place names. Place names are often not easily analyzable. Listing them in the root index would provide little extra information about them. To see a complete list of the place names, look under 'place names' in the English-to-SENĆOŦEN section.

The roots section is structured with levels of indentation to show the derivational relationships among words based on the same root.

A preliminary version of the root index has been distributed to the SENĆOŦEN language teachers for their use in preparing classroom materials. They have found it useful. The similar root index of the Klallam Dictionary has been an important tool for Klallam language teachers.

Sample entries are given below to illustrate the dictionary structure.
